FRONT MATTER

Welcome

The Pinterest SEO Starter Scorecard

See how clearly your profile, boards, Pins, and destination pages communicate what your business is about, and where the biggest gaps are.

Pinterest works from signals: your profile, your boards, your pin titles and descriptions, your images, and the pages you send people to. When those signals are specific and consistent, they may make it easier for Pinterest, and for the people scrolling it, to understand what you do and place your content in front of the right person. When they're vague, generic, or inconsistent, even good products and nice photos can go unseen.

This scorecard walks you through your actual Pinterest account, section by section, so you can see clearly where those signals are strong, where they're thin, and where they're working against you without your realizing it. By the end, you'll know which parts of your account are ready to build on and which need attention first, and you'll have already fixed a few things along the way.

It's a self-assessment you can complete in about 20–30 minutes, using your own account and your own judgment.

What You'll Need

- ☐ Pinterest business account, logged in and open
- ☐ Your website open in another tab
- ☐ About 20–30 minutes of undistracted attention
- ☐ A notepad, or the blank lines in this document

You do not need: Pinterest Analytics history, a paid tool, or prior Pinterest experience. If your account is brand new, answer based on what's set up so far, and treat any "not yet built" item as a 0, not a trick question.

How Scoring Works

Each section below has 2–3 questions. Score each one 0 (not really), 1 (partially), or 2 (yes, clearly), based on what you actually find when you look, not what you assume is true.

A note on what this score measures. This score reflects the clarity and coherence of the signals your account is sending, based on what you can observe yourself. It is not a technical audit, and it isn't a measurement of Pinterest's internal systems, your actual reach, or your performance, none of which a self-assessment can see. Clearer, more coherent signals may make it easier for Pinterest and visitors to understand your business; they aren't a guarantee of traffic or rankings. Use your results to find out where to look closer, not as a verdict.

A Account & Profile Signal

SECTION 1 OF 6

WHY THIS MATTERS

Your profile is the first place a visitor, and Pinterest's own systems, look for a fast answer to "what is this account about?" A vague or generic profile makes every board and pin downstream harder to place correctly.

Score This	0–2 per question
A1. Read only your profile name, image, and bio, with no other context. Could a stranger correctly guess what you sell, who it's for, and roughly what makes you different? Or would they only get the broad category, or nothing at all?	0 1 2
A2. Open your claimed-website status in Pinterest's business settings. Is your site claimed, and does what Pinterest shows about it there still accurately reflect your current business?	0 1 2
A3. Compare your Pinterest bio, word for word, to how you'd actually describe your business to a customer in one sentence. Does your bio closely match your real pitch, rather than reading as generic (like "cute things for your home")?	0 1 2

0 Not really 1 Partially 2 Yes, clearly

QUICK FIX

If A1 or A3 scored low, rewrite your bio right now using the specific words you'd use out loud, not the words that sounded "on brand" when you set the account up months ago.

Section A total ___ / 6

B Board Topic Coherence

WHY THIS MATTERS

Boards are one of the clearest topic signals your account sends. A board that mixes unrelated content doesn't just fail to help, it actively dilutes the signal every pin on it could otherwise be sending.

Score This	0–2 per question
B1. Pick your 3 most active boards. For each, can you write one clear sentence describing exactly what it's about (without using the word "stuff," "things," or "faves"), and do the pins on that board actually match that sentence?	0 1 2
B2. Look at your full list of board names. How many describe a specific, searchable topic (e.g. "Non-Toxic Candle Care," "Small Apartment Fall Decor") versus a vague or personal label (e.g. "Inspo," "Random," "Loves")?	0 1 2
B3. If you removed your business name from every board description, would a stranger still understand who each board is for and why it exists, based on the topic itself rather than "we/our brand" language?	0 1 2

0 Not really 1 Partially 2 Yes, clearly

QUICK FIX

Rename your single vaguest board today to name the specific topic, not the vibe. "Cozy Vibes" becomes "Cozy Bedroom Styling Ideas."

Section B total ___ / 6

C Pin-Level Search Signal

WHY THIS MATTERS

A pin title that just repeats your brand or product name gives Pinterest very little to work with. A title and description that describe the actual idea give it something real to match against a search.

Score This	0–2 per question
C1. Open your 10 most recent pins. Does each title describe the specific idea in the pin ("Cozy Fall Entryway Ideas for Small Apartments"), rather than mostly repeating the product/brand name ("Juniper Lane — New Candle")?	0 1 2
C2. Read 3 pin descriptions in full. Do they add real context (who it's for, what problem it solves, when someone would want it), rather than just restating the title in slightly different words?	0 1 2
C3. Do your pin titles and descriptions use language a customer would actually type into Pinterest search, rather than internal brand/product/collection names that only make sense to you?	0 1 2

0 Not really 1 Partially 2 Yes, clearly

QUICK FIX

Take your single best-performing pin and rewrite its title and description as if you were writing it for someone who has never heard of your brand.

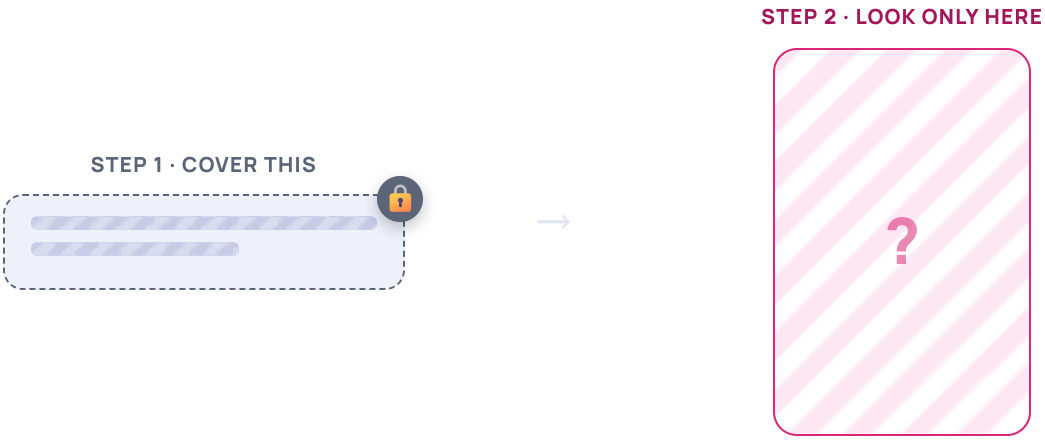

Section C total ___ / 6

D Creative-Topic Match

SECTION 4 OF 6

WHY THIS MATTERS

Pinterest discovery is visual first. A well-written title can't fully carry a pin whose image doesn't represent its stated topic, and a topic that only lives in the title, with no visual support, is a weaker signal than one the image itself communicates.

Cover the title and description with your hand. Looking only at the image and any text overlay: would a stranger correctly guess the topic?

Score This	0–2 per question
D1. Pick 5 recent pins. Cover the title and description with your hand and look only at the image and any text overlay. Would a stranger correctly guess the topic from the visual alone, most of the time?	0 1 2
D2. Where the topic isn't obvious from the image alone (a close-up product shot, an abstract lifestyle photo), is there readable text overlay carrying that information?	0 1 2
D3. Are your pins consistently vertical, rather than square or horizontal images repurposed from Instagram?	0 1 2

0 Not really · 1 Partially · 2 Yes, clearly

QUICK FIX

If a recent pin failed the cover-the-title test, add a short, legible text overlay stating the idea in a few words.

Section D total ___ / 6

E Destination Integrity

WHY THIS MATTERS

A pin makes a promise. A landing page that doesn't deliver on that specific promise, quickly and clearly, creates a poor visitor experience and makes it less likely the click accomplishes what the pin set out to do, no matter how well the pin itself was built.

Score This	0–2 per question
E1. Click through 5 of your own pins as a stranger would, someone who clicked because of the specific topic. Does the landing page immediately deliver on that promise, rather than dropping them on a generic homepage or shop page that doesn't match?	0 1 2
E2. For pins promising something specific (a guide, a list, a particular product), is that specific thing actually visible on the page without scrolling or searching for it?	0 1 2
E3. On your phone, does every destination page load quickly and feel intentional, rather than feeling broken, slow, or clearly not built for mobile?	0 1 2

0 Not really 1 Partially 2 Yes, clearly

QUICK FIX

If you found a real mismatch, fix the fastest side of it today: either point the pin's link at a page that actually matches, or add a section to the landing page that fulfills the specific promise the pin makes.

Section E total ___ / 6

F Overall Presence Coherence

SECTION 6 OF 6

WHY THIS MATTERS

Sections A–E each check one layer on its own. This section asks you to step back and look at the whole account at once, closer to how a real visitor actually experiences it.

Score This	0–2 per question
F1. Scroll through your last 20 pins with no other context, as a stranger would. Could you name 3–5 consistent topics your business appears to be about, rather than it reading as scattered?	0 1 2
F2. Do your boards, pin topics, and destinations all reinforce the same handful of core subjects, rather than pulling in different directions (boards about general home decor, but pins that are all direct product shots with no lifestyle context)?	0 1 2

0 Not really 1 Partially 2 Yes, clearly

QUICK FIX

Write down the 3–5 topics you want your account to be known for. Before you publish your next few pins, check each one against that list.

Section F total ____ / 4

YOUR RESULTS

What Your Scorecard Shows

ADD UP YOUR SIX SECTION TOTALS

_____ / 34 Plot your total on the bands below

0–11	Signals Are Thin or Inconsistent. Most of what you checked points to unclear or inconsistent signals about what your business offers. Sections A and B, profile and boards, are usually the highest-leverage place to start.
12–22	Some Clear Signals, Real Gaps Remain. Parts of your account send clear signals; other parts likely don't yet. Your lowest-scoring section is probably your best next move.
23–34	Strong, Coherent Signals. Most of what you checked sends clear, consistent signals, which may make it easier for Pinterest and visitors to understand what you offer. The remaining opportunity is less about fixing confusion and more about building out reach deliberately.

Plot Your Six Section Scores

Look at your six section totals individually, not just the sum. A 23 built from consistent scores across every section reflects a genuinely different account than a 23 built from a near-perfect Section A and a near-zero Section D. The pattern is worth more than the number. Shade each bar to your section total.

A · Profile Signal		/ 6
B · Board Coherence		/ 6
C · Pin Search Signal		/ 6
D · Creative-Topic Match		/ 6
E · Destination Integrity		/ 6
F · Overall Coherence		/ 4

NEXT STEPS

What You Can Do Next, On Your Own

A few things worth fixing today, independent of anything else:

- Rewrite your bio or your single vaguest board name using specific language (Sections A and B).
- Rewrite the title and description on your one best-performing pin to describe the actual idea, not just the product (Section C).
- Fix the single worst pin-to-page mismatch you found (Section E).

These are real improvements, not placeholders. What they won't do is give you a keyword-researched topic architecture, a content pipeline, or a 90-day plan, since that takes real research this scorecard was built to point toward, not to replace.

When the Workbook Makes Sense

If your scores were low mostly in Sections A–C, your account likely needs more foundational cleanup before deeper strategy work pays off, and you've already made a start on that above. If your foundation held up well but you're still not sure what topics to actually pursue, what to pin, how often, or how to build a real content system around your products, that's a research-and-construction project bigger than any single scorecard.

YOU NOW KNOW

- ✓ Where your account's signals are clear and where they're thin
- ✓ Which profile, board, and pin fixes you can make immediately
- ✓ Whether your destinations actually deliver on your pins' promises

THE WORKBOOK BUILDS

- → Real keyword and demand research using Pinterest's own tools
- → A topic architecture and board strategy built from that research
- → A 30-idea content pipeline and destination-matching system
- → A sustainable publishing cadence and a 90-day plan

You now know what needs attention. The Pinterest SEO Workbook helps you research, build, and execute the complete Pinterest SEO system.

ACCOUNT & PROFILE

- [ ] A stranger could guess what I sell from my bio alone
- [ ] My website is claimed and accurately represented
- [ ] My bio matches my real one-sentence pitch

BOARDS

- [ ] My top 3 boards each have one clear, describable topic
- [ ] My board names describe topics, not vibes
- [ ] My board descriptions make sense without my brand name

PINS

- [ ] My recent pin titles describe the idea, not just the product
- [ ] My pin descriptions add real context, not a restated title
- [ ] My language matches how customers actually search

CREATIVE

- [ ] My images communicate the topic without the title
- [ ] Non-obvious topics have readable text overlay
- [ ] My pins are consistently vertical

DESTINATIONS

- [ ] My pins land on pages that deliver the specific promise
- [ ] Promised specifics are visible without extra scrolling/searching
- [ ] My destination pages work well on mobile

OVERALL

- [ ] A stranger could name 3–5 consistent topics I appear to be about
- [ ] My boards, pins, and destinations reinforce the same subjects
